     People are still giving money to charity: a survey by Foresters showed that 50% of people donated cash in 2011. However, increasing numbers of people preferred to find other ways to help others. For example, 30% of the informants told Foresters that they had donated old things while 07 % had collected food aids for the homeless. When the reporter asked if they had contributed anything to help during emergency situations; 13% of them answered that they had volunteered their time and efforts to help some local charitable organizations. But if you run out of ways to provide assistance you may find inspiration in this list of ways through which you can support other people.

     Donating blood is one of the most famous ways of helping others. Most people between the age of 17 and 65 can give blood, with men able to donate every three months and women every four. Donating organs is another way which can help others to survive. No one needs his organs when he is dead, yet only 29% of us have registered as donors.

     These are simple and effective ways we can all do. Why don't we act now? There must be someone somewhere needing our money, clothes, blood, or even our organs.
